Species differences in renal effects of adenosine in anesthetized dogs and rats. We tested the hypothesis that the species differences in the renal effects of adenosine (ADO) resulted from a difference in renal hemodynamics. Renal blood flow, renal vascular resistance, and glomerular filtration rate were measured before and during infusion of ADO at 30- and 90-micrograms/kg/min in anesthetized dogs and rats. Plasma renin activity (PRA) and plasma ADO were measured. In dogs, ADO reduced renal blood flow from 216 +/- 18 to 139 +/- 10 ml/min/kg (P less than 0.01). In rats, blood flow did not change with ADO, and renal vascular resistance was raised (P less than 0.01). PRA was raised with ADO in dogs (1,482 +/- 651 to 18,065 +/- 7,832 ng/ml/hr, P less than 0.01), but remained unaltered in rats (1,675 +/- 1,411 to 1,992 +/- 1,599). Plasma ADO decreased in dogs from an average of 0.58 +/- 0.15 to 0.17 +/- 0.07 microgram/ml (P less than 0.01), whereas in rats it remained at 0.72 +/- 0.13 microgram/ml during the infusion (P = 0.14). It was concluded that the renal vasoconstrictive effect of ADO was less in rats than in dogs. The lack of effect of ADO on renal hemodynamics in rats seems to be related to the pre-existing significant renal vasoconstrictor effect of ADO. There has been growing concern about the potential carcinogenic effects of exposure to microwave radiation emitted by cell phones. The radiation can cause cancer, and it seems like the closer you are to the antenna, the greater the risk. One study from the late 1990s looked at cell phone use during pregnancy and found a small increase in the risk of developing childhood brain tumors. A former swimmer and wrestler, he first came to prominence in Russia and Bulgaria in the Soviet era through his wrestling career, where he represented them at the 1968, 1972 and 1976 Olympics, while also adding on five more European titles to his resume. He then turned his attention to golf, starting out as a part-time member of the 1974 USSR Open team before being brought in as a full-time member in the years that followed. Tkachenko made his first start as a professional at the end of the 1974 European Tour, and made a huge impact by finishing only three strokes behind the winner, Johnny Prunty. He went on to win the first three tournaments in the 1975 season, coming back to win back-to-back tournaments in the 1976 season by nine strokes and finishing off the year by winning the World Cup, too. He then won the Italian Open in 1977 before finishing the season by taking his sixth World Cup. He continued to play on the European circuit throughout the 1980s and 1990s, winning the European Tour Order of Merit in 1980 and finishing runner-up in the 1991 season, only to enjoy his greatest career in the early part of the 2000s. He finished runner-up at the 2002 World Cup and then won his 12th and final World Cup title in Japan in 2008. His 15th and final season saw him finish outside the top-20 of the European Order of Merit, though his 19th and final season was his best yet, finishing 11th with a total of 1,149 points. Tkachenko finished his professional career at 46 years old, having won 20 professional titles and the European Tour Order of Merit three times. 1955 - Mark Calcavecchia Though Mark Calcavecch
